CHANCELLOR'S WARNING

Viewing, reading or laughing at the contents herein this publication dedicated to The Empire, IKV Black Demon, & Crew can cause blindness; unwanted hair growth in unusual places; uncontrollable fits of weirdness; and may complicate or cause pregnancy. You've been warned.

KLINGON FACTIOD:

The furry porcine creature in TNG Episode Where No One Has Gone Before was a targH. Kruge's bestial pet in Search for Spock was not. In the novelization of ST3 it was referred to as Warrigul. A Warrigal is one of the Aboriginal words for Dingo.

Unkle Kahn's Bathroom Reader is published semi-quarterly, that means that we try to print four copies per year, but sometimes don't get the chance. But what would you expect, it's free. But if you are willing to give cash for something so entertaining, we won't turn it down.

Star Trek, Star Trek: The Next Generation, Star Trek: Deep Space Nine, Star Trek: Voyager, Star Trek: Lalapalooza, and that new Star Trek movie that has the fanboy's underwear in a twist are all exclusive trademarks of Paramount/VIACOM and probably CBS. So get off our backs.

For information about joining The Empire for military, civilian, xeno, or just contacting Unkle Kahn, go to the website: klington-empire.org

For information on what that smell is, we smell nothing and he who smelt it, dealt it.

A Klingon went into a bar and he sat down. He took out from a tiny cage a beetle, a cockroach and a tiny chus'ugh (a musical instrument). The cockroach picked up the chus'ugh and began to play music as the beetle began to sing. The bartender's eyes widened in surprise.

"What an amazing thing!" he said, "I've never seen anything like it."

"Well, don't get too excited," replied the Klingon. "It's not as amazing as it looks. The cockroach is a ventriloquist."

The wind does not respect a fool.
Especially if he pulled the finger.

Three Terrans walked into a bar.
"Go away!" shouted the Klingon bartender.
So they left.

How do you make a Pakled crazy?

Stick him in a round room and tell him to urinate in the corner.

Have you heard about the Romulan kamikaze pilot?
He flew 22 missions.

Two drunk Klingons were staggering back home one night when they see a targH on the side walk licking himself.

Kaos turns to Khan and says, "I wish.. I wish I could do that."

"Yeah," Khan replied "but that that targH looks like he'd bite you."

An old House leader was on his death bed and beckoned his mate over.
He said with a trembling voice, "Ka'lest, when I die, I want you to marry Worf"

His mate looked at him with bewilderment in her eyes, "But my love, I thought you hated Worf."

The old man looked up and with his dying breath cackled, "And I still do!"

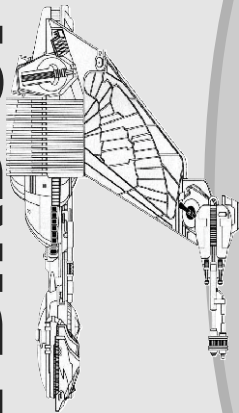

Unkle Kahn's Special Report: Cardassian Kanar

Kanar: A Cardassian drink that requires getting used to. It can be replicated onboard Federation starships, as well as found in well stocked bars, but it can go bad, and can cause food poisoning. Kanar has been known to be consumed in some quantity by certain members of the Cardassian government. ("The Wounded" [TNG], "Profit And Loss" [DS9], "Til Death Do Us Part" [DS9])

This Cardassian favorite, was seen at least six times with two different bottles, two different colors on DS9, and four different stoppers prior to the seventh season. In the seventh season, it was regularly seen in Damar's hands prior to his breaking ranks with the Dominion.

The bottle was originally a Chianti wine bottle (Chianti is a type of Italian dry wine which is typically found in reed wrapped bottles). Now it is sometimes possible to find a VERY similar copy at import stores. Some are clear, like the ones I located, others are covered with a thin plastic color coat. This color coat, can be identified by carefully scraping the bottom of the bottle, and if color flakes off, you have a clear bottle underneath. Do not use flames to try to burn this coat off, I discovered on another bottle that these cheap, decorative glass bottles won't hold up. You can just try chemical strippers or gently scrape the color off. (This can kill an evening) (continued)

The Chianti bottles come in 1 foot (old Banfi, and other brands of Chianti bottles), 3 foot (San Carlos, and possibly others), and 6 foot lengths (who knows which brands, often came with instructions on converting into lamps). Use the 1 foot bottle. The labels are best seen in the book "The Art of Star Trek", and can be photocopied, but for the best appearance it would be best to scan the labels and clean it up using your computers paint program, before printing it and attaching it to the bottle. I found the stopper at Pier One Imports (about $4.00 US), it was actually a pour spout (like the ones found in bars) that was painted a metallic color. I found that I had to spray paint the top of the stopper with a base coat of black (to get an even color), then spray paint it with the final color. I wasn't able to match the color seen in the book, so don't bother to try German Metallic Silver. If you can't find the stopper at Pier One or at a similar import store, you will need to make it.

The contents in the episode "The Maquis, Part II" [DS9] were quite thick, almost syrupy, and dark, black or purple, I suspected Hershey's Chocolate Syrup. The stopper was shaped much like a honeycomb (the old fashioned domed varieties), made from a tan or flesh colored rubbery material with bumps. I suspect some adult product was used.

The contents from the episode "Destiny" [DS9] appear to be a dark purple/black liquid. Grape juice, prune juice, Kool-Aid or some similarly colored drink can be used. The stopper is the same one seen in "The Art of Star Trek". (continued)

CONVENTION SECURITY BADGE

That's right boys and girls. Are you tired of not having enough money for admission to a local con when it's time for it to come around? Did you know that most cons will allow you to "work off" your admission fee by being part of the security team? Did you know that half of the time they never check? Here is your chance to get into your con with your own security badge! Just cut out along the lines and laminate. It's that easy! If a con official wants to see your badge, just show them this and tell you that the Emperor assigned this to you for this specific con. If they ask for credentials, tell them this is an elite badge and that you are not authorized to answer questions, only to ask them.

CLAIMED IN THE NAME OF THE EMPIRE

Yes, even you too can claim anything in the name of The Empire! Start claiming items, events, objects of unknown origin, gaseous clouds, independence, and even people and places! Just have a look at what our mighty warriors and civilians have to claim:

- ▲ Kamarag tai-K'norm claims the shopping cart with the squeaky wheel, because no one else will.
- ▲ Khachie claims he saw the face of k'Elvis in his mihn'hor meat pie.
- ▲ Uncle Kahn claims that wasn't him climbing out of your daughter's window that night.
- ▲ Koron claims it wasn't him piloting the shuttle that night either.
- ▲ Torg claims the film rights to a movie based on the unfortunate events that proceed his life.
- ▲ Maltz claims that he was denied ritual suicide while in captivity.
- ▲ Keeve claims prune juice, because it can move the mightiest warrior.

Lady Lukara's Rules of Klingon Etiquette:

1. TargH are always welcome at the table; Starfleet officers must eat with the children.
2. Don't use you sleeve as a napkin; use your neighbor's sleeve instead.
3. Loud and boisterous behavior is expected when two or more are gathered to dine.
4. No mating rituals shall be initiated at the table without mutual consent.
5. Each guest is expected to bring his or her own dagger.
6. All guests are to participate in the obligatory after-dinner gas expulsion contest.
7. If your gagh crawls off your plate, it is fair game for whoever spots it.
8. The smoking of really vile cigars is encouraged to provide that special "atmosphere" to fine dining.
9. If your medal falls into the punch bowl, remove it (the medal, not the bowl)
10. When dining out, ask the manager what his restaurant's latest health code rating was. If it's below 70, then reserve the place for your next banquet.

IMPERIAL TEA PARTY

Klingon Tea Ceremony: (tlhIngan Dargh Seq) Performed by two friends, this ceremony is a reminder that "death is an experience best shared" (Heghlu'DI mobbe'lu QaQqu' Hegh wani'), and partly as a test of courage, as the tea is toxic to tlhInganpu. Without an antidote the tea would be quite deadly to a tera'ngan. "Up The Long Ladder" [TNG]

The tea (Dargh) was made with white blossoms plucked from a branch (which to me looked like a dried cactus plant). The blossoms were placed in brass teacups (Dargh Hlvje') and (presumably hot) water was added. The cups were held with both hands, and sipped like one would drink milk from a bowl.

Sour Tea: A common cure for most stomach ailments on the Homeworld. There is a saying "Sour tea cures everything". Use equal generous parts black tea and roasted green tea (available at oriental grocery stores), boil together for 10 minutes, and add sour salt (kosher section of store) to taste.

Uncle Kahn's Sweet Tea: Brew one bag of orange pekoe & pekoe cut black, then add 1/2-3/4 cup of sugar in pitcher, stir and chill. Enjoy with a lemon slice.

Cardassian Kanar Report (Continued part 3)

In the August 1999 issue of "STAR TREK: The Magazine" Paramount property master Joe Longo gave an interview, and stated that the actual kanar recipe was giving Casey Biggs (Damar) sugar overdoses. The old actual recipe was made from karo syrup (corn syrup) which "looks like car oil, and when you pour it it comes out real thick". When it was realized that this massive dose of sugar was causing Casey problems, the recipe was switched to a sugar-free pancake syrup that was thickened. Longo states "the gag was to have the drink so thick it's almost goo, but he's [Biggs] still drinking it". I suspect that Thick-It (a product used for swallowing disorders and found in pharmacies) was the thickening agent.

The contents from the episode "The Way Of The Warrior" [DS9] appears to be a coffee colored drink with lots of creamer. It made an appearance in the episode "Ties Of Blood And Water" [Ds9].

This impromptu report was brought to you by The Empire's Imperial Prop and Set Guild. Keep watching the guild for a full report with images and more reports on bottles and info to make your own.
